

MORAVIAN HIGH ACRES

CANADENSIS, PENNSYLVANIA

ABOUT THE PROPERTY

The cemetery dates back to 1848, eleven years before the township was formed. It has been an important part of the history of the area since.

Natural burial at Moravian High Acres Cemetery is a way to preserve Pocono mountain history. High Acres Cemetery is located in Canadensis (named for the scientific name for the hemlock tree, Tsuga canadensis), in Barrett Township in northern Monroe County. According to the Monroe Historical Society, the area was recognized for its "dense forests and clean streams. The early industries of the township reflected the abundance of these natural resources. Bark from Barrett Township trees was used in the tanneries to process leather and pelts. Numerous lumber mills produced not only timber to be floated down the Delaware River to Philadelphia markets, but created items such as clothes pins, roof shingles, shoe pegs, barrels and sprags..." Once the tanneries closed, the area became a destination for wealthy Philadelphians seeking a peaceful rural retreat.

The cemetery has recently changed hands from previous owners and stewards, the Daniels Family, owners of Daniels Top O The Poconos Family resort to the Steelmantown Cemetery Company, joining the family of cemeteries maintained by Ed Bixby.

UNIQUENESS OF THE PROPERTY

The cemetery is home to the Alpine Arboretum and Bird Sanctuary. Our mission is to preserve and protect these precious surroundings through natural burial.
